

"The Spring Clean of Charmouth Beach"

Have you thought about a spring clean yet?

Breaking out the duster, sweeping up cobwebs, and smiling as your Henry Hoover does his thing. Then spare a thought for the Nurdle Organisation as they clean Charmouth Beach of nurdles and biobeads.

All this occurs at the time of high spring tide, as the rubbish is left stranded on the strand.

Longshore drift has brought it there, trapped in the estuary of the River Char.

Portable vacuum cleaners picking up detritus off the beach to go into a magical sorter, which removes the microplastics, allowing the organic matter to be returned to the beach.

The collected beads will be repurposed into saleable products, to offset the financial cost.

So, please think of the environmental cost, should there not be a spring clean of Charmouth Beach.

Trommels separate sand from plastic

Sydney The Charmouth Dragon