"The School Run"

As the boy walked home from school, there was a rainbow up in the sky, and he wondered about it.
The old man by his side, also thought of the beauty of the rainbow.
It took him back to his own childhood, seeing rainbows, as he, to, had walked home from school, as a lad.
They got him to think about how they were there, what made them.
It started his voyage of discovery, his learning of physics and chemistry and mathematics and, later, of languages. He used that learning to solve problems throughout his life, helping others in the communities he lived in.
Now, as an old man, he was able to enjoy that same experience he had had as a child, as he learnt again, how to be a child. How to wonder.
