

"The Witch's Grave"

We are told by economists that "A rising tide lifts all boats".

This is patently untrue, as too many are busy bailing out their vessels to notice.

They don't have the materials or tools to fix the leaks, and don't have the funds to replace the tattered sails.

However, those on their super-yachts get to see even broader horizons, can travel where they please, not caring how many dinghies are swamped as they pass by.

Then, in a severe economic crisis, an old inscription on a stone by the Caledonian Canal comes to mind.

"At the lowest of tides, so the witches grave is uncovered."

The water level has dropped to such an extent that all boats are in danger. Will the super-yachts flounder on the rocks?

Will the dinghies get to sail away? Or, in her fury, will the witch wreak havoc amongst all?

Only time will tell. Only time will tell.